Online study manners for Osaka University students

1 Ask for consent before taking pictures or screenshots!

If you want to take a picture of class contents or a classmate's face on the screen, you need the prior consent of both the instructor and the classmate.
Taking pictures without consent may constitute a violation of portrait rights.

2 Don't share class information without permission!

You may not share the class's URL, meeting ID, and/or password with others without the prior consent of the instructor. Also, any images or video that you take in class may not be shared on the internet without the prior consent of both the instructor and your classmates who appear in such images and/or videos.
It may constitute a violation of copyright and/or portrait rights.
Outside of class, don't discuss your classmates' personal information that was shared in class.

3 You may not redistribute materials without permission!

You may not redistribute materials for online classes to others without the prior consent of the instructor.
Even if your classmates or friends ask you, you should not redistribute them.

4 Don't force your classmates to go on screen!

Students are learning in various environments, and some students are not willing to show their faces.
Even if you are friends, do not force them to go on screen.
Even if you don't mean to force them, your classmates may feel like they are being forced.
